

CALIFORNIAN BUNGALOW - ARCHITECTURE

The late 1920s and 1930s were mostly characterised by the Californian bungalow, imported from America. The Frank Lloyd Wright influenced architect, Walter Burley Griffin, was also working at this time, designing sandstone buildings that were meant to merge with the landscape. For example, in Castlecraig, Sydney.

Developed in California, the style was imported into Australia in the late 1920s and 1930s. It features are (except for the lowline roof) most suitable for Australian conditions. Distinctive features were massive porch pylons (often raked) supporting a flat or low pitched roof. Exposed roof rafters under wide eaves and gable to the porch.
